 BLUE POWER

Tellurium Q introduced the Blue, power cable, a budget version of their Black power cable. Although the Black offered a "meaty bass quality" we felt the Blue was best value. It had "a focused, punchy bass, offered a better balanced presentation for the vinyl front-end, injecting more air into the upper frequencies while draining some of the more claustrophobic bass. This gave the Blue a breezy presentation. Upper mids seemed to relax, taking their time to consider detail and tonal colour".

"Playing jazz, via CD, the effect was more accentuated. The Blue almost decluttered and cleansed the midrange to produce an outstanding clarity, adding a tremendous sense of balance". Priced at £399 for a one metre length this power cable is not cheap but it isn't the most expensive by any means either – and it worked better than most we found. With top quality, high resolution systems costing thousands, quality mains cables make a difference, gently smoothing and focussing the sound, and this one was fine value we felt.
